

Call for Submissions for a Special Issue for Theory into Practice Applications of Motivation Research to Practice

Special issue

Theory into Practice (TIP) is calling for submissions focused on applications of motivation research to practice. TIP is published quarterly by Taylor & Francis, and only publishes special thematic issues. All articles are written about applications of theory and research to practice. TIP does not publish original empirical studies. The articles are relatively short compared with other journals. Additional information about TIP can be found here: <https://www.tandfonline.com/toc/htip20/current>.

Guest Editors:

- Héfer Bembenutty, Queens College, City University of New York (hefer.bembenutty@qc.cuny.edu)
- Dale H. Schunk, The University of North Carolina at Greensboro (dhschunk@uncg.edu)
- Maria K. DiBenedetto, The University of North Carolina at Greensboro (m_dibene@uncg.edu)

Overview:

Although there are many motivational theories from diverse perspectives, applications of motivation research to practice are still needed that could enhance teaching, learning, and performance. This special issue aims to fill the gap between motivational theories and the practice of educators, learners, school professionals, and practitioners. We will consider articles that reflect diverse motivational theories and processes such as expectancies and values, self-efficacy, attributions, interests, self-determination, goals and goal orientations, identities, emotions, mindsets, and cultures, among others.

We seek conceptual manuscripts, based on data-driven findings, that offer practical solutions and approaches that translate current motivational research trends into practical learning and contextual environments. We invite potential authors to submit a one-page article proposal that includes the following: (a) proposed title of the manuscript and names and affiliations of authors; (b) theoretical background information, including historical influences on contemporary motivational theories from which educational practices would be derived; (c) explanation of how the manuscript fits with the purpose of the special issue and how it advances existing knowledge and motivational practices; (d) description of the specific motivational practices that the manuscript will discuss; (e) description of the age group(s) and/or populations that will be discussed, and (f) recommendations for further study.

Tentative Timeline:

- Call for proposals: September 10, 2020
- Submission of proposals: October 1, 2020
- Accepting/Rejecting proposals: October 22, 2020
- Submission of the first draft: November 30th
- Review of proposals: December 28, 2020
- Feedback to authors: February 1, 2021
- Resubmission of revisions: April 15, 2021
- Submission to the publisher: July 15, 2021
- Publication time: November 2021

Please submit proposals via e-mail, to: tip@osu.edu